PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

Happy August! July 1, 2009 is the start of my second term as LMMAR President. In my previous term of office, we came a long way to developing a Professional Class Organization. Our continuous improvement approach has paid off. Are we finished improving LMMAR? I am reminded of a Nike ad with the slogan, "There is no finish line." The more we advance, the more we are exposed to new ideas to do better and open to raising the bar. Good management is always in control of budget. Last

It's that time of the Year!

Each year, collecting dues is a big task for us. We are all volunteers. Please help make our work easier by doing your part and sending in your dues. Tell your LM Retiree friends and acquaintances about joining LMMAR. For those that have sent there dues, Thank you!

LOCKHEED MARTIN UNVEILS FIRST STEALTH FIGHTER FOR U.S. NAVY

Ft. Worth, TX, July 28th, 2009

Adm. Gary Roughead, the U.S. Navy's Chief of Naval Operations, addresses the crowd at the rollout ceremony of the first F-35C Lightning II carrier variant. The F-35C is on schedule to meet the Navy's Initial Operational Capability in 2015, and represents a leap in technology and capability over existing fighters, combining stealth with supersonic speed and high agility.

A ceremony today at Lockheed Martin's [NYSE: LMT] Fort Worth plant marked the rollout of the U.S. Navy's first-ever stealth fighter, the F-35C Lightning II. The aircraft will enable the Navy to possess 5th generation fighter capabilities at sea, extending America's reach and reducing the timeline from threat to response.

Top Navy leadership, signal flags and a crowd of employees, including reserve and retired Navy personnel, were on hand to celebrate the strike fighter's unveiling. Adm. Gary Roughead, the U.S. Navy's Chief of Naval Operations, welcomed the new aircraft to the fleet.

"The JSF will show the world that our Sailors will never be in a fair fight because this airplane will top anything that comes its way," Roughead said of the F-35. "It will give our Sailors and pilots the tactical and technical advantage in the skies, and it will relieve our aircraft as they age out."

Tom Burbage, a former Navy test pilot and the executive vice president and general manager of F-35 Program Integration for Lockheed Martin, thanked Navy leadership for being fully engaged in the F-35's development and "actively working to define joint and coalition tactics that will exploit this platform in ways we've never envisioned. We at Lockheed Martin are both proud and humbled by the trust the U.S. Navy has placed with us to lead the development and introduction of the Navy's newest stealthy, supersonic strike fighter."

The first F-35C, known as CF-1, will undergo a wide-ranging series of ground tests before its first flight, scheduled for late 2009. CF-1 is the ninth F-35 test aircraft to be rolled out, and joins a fleet of F-35A (conventional takeoff and landing) and F-35B (short takeoff/vertical landing) variants that have logged more than 100 flights.

The F-35C is on schedule to meet the Navy's Initial Operational Capability in 2015, and represents a leap in technology and capability over existing fighters, combining stealth with supersonic speed and high agility. The Lightning II employs the most powerful and comprehensive sensor package ever incorporated into a fighter.

The F-35C possesses uncompromised carrier suitability and low-maintenance stealth materials designed for long-term durability in the carrier environment. The Lightning II's operational and support costs are forecast to be lower than those of the fighters it will replace.

The F-35 and F-22 are the world's only 5th generation fighters, uniquely characterized by a combination of advanced stealth with supersonic speed and high agility, sensor fusion, network-enabled capabilities and advanced sustainment. The F-35 is a supersonic, multi-role, 5th generation strike fighter. Three F-35 variants derived from a common design, developed together and using the same sustainment infrastructure worldwide, will replace at least 13 types of aircraft for 11 nations initially, making the Lightning II the most cost-effective fighter program in history.

Lockheed Martin is developing the F-35 with its principal industrial partners, Northrop Grumman and BAE Systems. Two separate, interchangeable F-35 engines are under development: the Pratt & Whitney F135 and the GE Rolls-Royce Fighter Engine Team F136.

SUNSHINE

Word has gotten to me that Bob Spitler was in the hospital and then went to a rehab facility due to a broken hip. We hope for a comfortable recovery.

Randy Rasmussen has been back in the hospital in serious condition with bladder cancer. He is doing better, but has a long haul ahead of him. Both Randy and his wife Helen display great spirits and believe in a higher power to prevail over Randy's future.

We have received word from the son of Harold E. Hendrix that his father passed away last November 2008. There was no other information available.

Kathy Koch passed away on July 23, 2009. Kathy had 28 years service with Lockheed Martin. Many of those years she headed the Toys for Tots committee and ran the toy drives in conjunction with the Marine Corp.

So much for this month of health issues.....have some happy and healthy days ahead
